Too Many Beds Trip the Author Of New Farce

'An Innocent Idea,' by Mar-

By Heywood Broun

By Heywood Broun

Martin Brown's new farce, "An Innocent Idea," is as lingering as a stop-sharp-at-twelve poker game. Again and again when the play seems on the point of breaking up the author cannot resist the temptation of adding one more round of vulgar foolery. The piece, which was produced at the Fulton Theatre last night, is evidently intended as a burlesque bedroom farce, and there are snatches of fun here and there, particularly in the first act. But it is entirely sporadic. Early in the evening the play becomes so hopelessly complicated that the interest never carries over from one scene to the next. It is vaudeville—and fearfully prolonged vaudeville. At least one spectator felt as tired as if he had gone through an entire evening of trained doors and accordance.
